QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, may litigants obtain consumer credit reports without the consumer's permission in all claims "involving" a consumer, where there is no actual need for such sensitive financial information and where no claim has been asserted against the consumer himself?

Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, does the adversarial objective of serving consumers with legal papers constitute a "permissible purpose" for obtaining full consumer credit reports where such reports are not needed to accomplish this task and the time for service has already expired?

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

The parties to the proceeding before the Court of Appeals were Abraham Paul Korotki, Attorney Services Corporation, Daniel V. Schmitt and Thomas, Ronald & Cooper. Amici curiae below included the United States Public Interest Research Group and the Bankcard Holders of America, both of whom fully endorse Petitioner's position.

Petitioner Abraham Paul Korotki ("Korotki"), respectfully requests that a writ of certiorari be issued to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in Korotki v. Attorney Services Corporation (No. 96-1877) is not reported, but can be found at 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS (4th Cir. 1997) (App. A). The opinion of the District Court is reported at Korotki v. Attorney Services Corporation, 931 F. Supp. 1269 (D. Md. 1996) (App. B).

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit ("Court of Appeals") was entered on December 5, 1997. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

15 U.S.C. § 1681a(d):

> The term "consumer report" means any written, oral, or other communication of any information by a consumer reporting agency bearing on a consumer's credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living which is used or expected to be used or collected in whole or in part for the purpose of serving as a factor in establishing the consumer's eligibility > for (1) credit or insurance to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, or (2) employment purposes, or (3) other purposes authorized under section 1681b of this title.

15 U.S.C. § 1681b provides, in relevant part, that "A consumer reporting agency may furnish a consumer report under the following circumstances and no other:

> * * *
> (A) intends to use the information in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving the extension of credit to, or review or collection of an account of, the consumer; or
> (B) intends to use the information for employment purposes; or
>
> (C) intends to use the information in connection with the underwriting of insurance involving the consumer; or
> (D) intends to use the information in connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility for a license or other benefit granted by a governmental instrumentality required by law to consider an applicant's financial responsibility or status; or
> (E) otherwise has a legitimate business need for the information in connection with a business transaction involving the consumer.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Needless Intrusion:

On October 25, 1993, Attorney Services Corporation ("ASC") obtained a copy of Korotki's consumer credit report from Equifax Credit Information Services ("Equifax"). J.A. 113. Although this process server admitted that it lacked Korotki's permission to obtain this information, and did not need the personal financial and credit information contained in this report, it claimed to have acted at the request of an attorney who hired ASC to serve certain legal papers upon this consumer. J.A. 217. Conceding that he had no authorization from Korotki, this attorney, Daniel V. Schmitt ("Schmitt") of the law firm of Thomas, Ronald & Cooper ("TRC"), also indicated that he had no need for this information and, at one point, even denied requesting this report. J.A. 151; 988.

By ASC's own admission, this was not the first time that this process server obtained information on the personal finances of individuals without their knowledge or consent. Although ASC was not even authorized to obtain credit reports in its capacity as a process server, J.A. 110, ASC openly sold consumer credit reports for two years prior to the credit inquiry at issue. J.A. 102; 105; 124. Rather than requiring a permissible purpose for such information, ASC merely required that its customers pay a $10.00 fee for each credit report ordered. Id.; J.A. 125; 129. In fact, ASC routinely provided such reports to Schmitt and TRC before it inquired into Korotki's finances. J.A. 146; 148.

Lacking any need for such sensitive information, ASC claimed that it used Korotki's credit report in connection with efforts to serve him with legal papers. Specifically, ASC contended that this report was somehow needed to find an address on which to serve him with a notice by one of Schmitt's construction clients of an intention to file a mechanic's lien on property owned by Korotki's company, APK Development. J.A. 49-50.

Contrary to this assertion, the undisputed facts confirmed that there was never any need to serve such papers on Korotki. Although Schmitt initially wanted ASC to post this notice at APK Development's commercial property, ASC failed to follow his instructions and erroneously posted Korotki's personal residence. J.A. 106-07; 130. By the time ASC's blunder had been called to Schmitt's attention on October 8, 1993, the 90-day limitations period for posting or serving a mechanic's lien notice had already expired under Maryland law. J.A. 150; see also Md. Real Prop. Code Ann. § 9-104.

Concerned that his client would sue him upon discovering this error, J.A. 731, Schmitt admits that he still ordered ASC to serve Korotki. While such belated service attempts were unnecessary, "ineffective and improper," J.A. 154-55, ASC nonetheless inquired into Korotki's credit history more than two weeks after limitations expired. J.A. 125A.

Although ASC claims to have obtained Korotki's credit report for the mysterious purpose of finding Korotki, Korotki was not lost. ASC already had four valid addresses on which to serve this notice, J.A. 151-52, and did not need more. Moreover, despite ASC's practice of obtaining such addresses through three other types of Equifax reports which do not contain such confidential credit information, ASC never ran anything but a full credit report on this consumer. J.A. 126-27; 184; 732-734. In fact, when asked whether ASC had considered running an Equifax "finder's report" to obtain an additional address for Korotki, ASC's vice president admitted that he merely "thought about it for a second" before rejecting this non-intrusive alternative. J.A. 108.

Beyond ASC's ability to obtain Equifax reports which could provide addresses without information on personal finances, ASC failed to use many other methods of locating individuals. J.A. 116-119. Although ASC could have waited at Korotki's residence or business to accomplish service, ASC did not even attempt this method before inquiring into his credit history. J.A. 118; 121-22. Because ASC "thought the costs would have been prohibitive" to perform a "stake-out," ASC simply felt that it would be quicker and easier to run Korotki's full credit report. Id.

After abandoning efforts to serve Korotki, Respondents admitted that they had absolutely no need for this information. When asked whether ASC had any "need for any information pertaining to Mr. Korotki's credit history," ASC's president admitted that he was "not interested whatsoever in credit history." J.A. 133. Schmitt also testified that he had no need for Korotki's credit report or credit history. J.A. 151. Nor did Schmitt ever instruct ASC to undertake any collection efforts which would require credit information. J.A. 110; 115-115A. At his deposition, ASC's vice president readily admitted that he was "not collecting money on indebtedness or working on the collection end of the business in connection with Abraham Korotki." J.A. 115-115A.

Although this credit report "was of no value" to ASC, J.A. 134, and ASC had no reason to believe that Schmitt needed this information, ASC further disseminated Korotki's credit history and financial status by faxing this report to Schmitt at his law firm. J.A. 110-12. While ASC claims that it sent the report to Schmitt "just to show that [it] had been working on his case," J.A. 112, it never made any effort to redact or otherwise obscure any of the sensitive credit information contained on that document. Id.

Rather than asserting claims against this consumer, the underlying claim involved a construction contract dispute between Schmitt's client and APK Development. In this claim, Angelozzi Brothers, Inc. ("Angelozzi") contended that APK Development owed this contractor $6,000.00 for compaction of soil underneath of a roadway located on APK Development's property. J.A. 713-14. Yet, contrary to this contention, Angelozzi was already paid "in full" to perform this compaction through a contract with Baltimore County, Maryland. J.A. 1003. Furthermore, as Angelozzi's own expert would admit in later litigation, this contractor failed to perform the needed compaction, causing the underlying roadway to fail. J.A. 166.

Recognizing that he had no claim against Korotki himself, and that the opportunity to obtain a mechanic's lien had long expired, Schmitt ultimately abandoned efforts to serve Korotki and instead served APK Development's resident agent with a breach of contract action in state court. J.A. 713-14. In fact, Schmitt admitted that he never sued Korotki personally because his "client's contract was with APK Development Corp. and no one else." J.A. 578. Thus, neither Schmitt nor Angelozzi ever asserted any claim against this consumer and Angelozzi never established any collectible debt which this consumer owed to this contractor. Outraged by this needless intrusion into his personal finances, Korotki sued ASC, TRC and Schmitt (collectively, "Respondents") for violating restrictions on access to consumer credit reports codified in the Fair Credit Reporting Act ("FCRA").

Opening the Door to Consumer Credit Information: The Opinions Below

On cross motions for summary judgment, Respondents sought to avoid liability under the FCRA while Korotki tried to establish their liability for this needless intrusion. Despite Respondents' repeated and uncontradicted admissions that they had no need for Korotki's consumer credit information, the District Court ruled against him.

Although the FCRA required that Respondents have permissible purposes before obtaining consumer credit reports, 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3), the District Court reversed this burden by requiring that Korotki produce affirmative evidence of illegitimate misuse of this report following its procurement. J.A. 1347. Admitting that it was "not sure that is right," J.A. 305, and claiming that "there is little law on this," J.A. 332, the District Court ignored the law contained in the FCRA itself and disregarded the opinions of every circuit court to consider this issue. Contrary to language requiring a "legitimate business need" for such consumer credit information, the District Court held a hearing to abruptly express the view that Respondents were permitted to obtain this report even if the action was "useless." J.A. 279.

In a lengthy published opinion, the District Court reluctantly acknowledged that Respondents may not have needed the information contained within Korotki's credit report, but nonetheless absolved them of liability for obtaining it. A-7-31. While correctly observing that these "users" of consumer credit information were required to comply with the dictates of the FCRA, A-19, the District Court lowered these requirements by requiring an affirmative showing of "bad faith" on the part of Schmitt and by broadly interpreting the provisions of the FCRA itself. A-7-31.

Straining to overcome the FCRA's restrictions, the District Court found a legitimate business need despite the undisputed testimony of all Respondents that they had absolutely no need for this information. See id. Ultimately recognizing that no contractual claims were ever made against this consumer, the District Court broadly held that there is a permissible purpose for obtaining consumer credit reports whenever anyone asserts monetary claims "involving" a consumer. A-24-25.

In affirming this decision, the Court of Appeals departed from the law of other circuits to adopt the District Court's presumption of a legitimate business need. Reversing the burdens established by Congress in enacting the FCRA, and ignoring the plain language of the statute, the Court of Appeals actually required the consumer to prove an "*im*permissible purpose" and to show some type of affirmative misuse. A-5.

Finding that Korotki "has made no showing that the report was obtained for an impermissible purpose," A-5, the Court of Appeals ignored Respondents' own admissions and assumed the presence of a "legitimate business need" for this information without ever articulating it. Id. By establishing such a presumption where Respondents themselves have confessed to no such need, the Court of Appeals adopted a broad and unprecedented interpretation of the FCRA which lowers the threshold for obtaining consumer credit reports and declares open season on consumer credit information.

Under the Court of Appeals' decision, whenever claims are asserted which merely "involve" a consumer, claimants have an automatic right to obtain the consumer's credit report -- even where, as here, no claim was ever asserted against the consumer himself and no genuine need existed! See A-5. Without specifying any actual need for this information, the Court of Appeals simply observed Korotki's role in a transaction involving his company, ignored the fact that no claim was ever made against Korotki personally, and permitted the intrusion into his personal finances. Id. By adopting this broad holding, the Court of Appeals has effectively repealed fundamental protections embodied in the FCRA, subjecting all consumers under its jurisdiction to the unwarranted intrusions of their adversaries.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I.

THIS COURT SHOULD NOT PERMIT THE COURT OF APPEALS TO REMOVE PROTECTIONS FOR CONSUMER PRIVACY WHICH CONGRESS AND A MAJORITY OF CIRCUITS HAVE UPHELD

Absent any evidence of an actual need for consumer credit information, the Court of Appeals' blind presumption of a legitimate business need for Korotki's credit report disregards the opinions of every circuit addressing this issue and ignores the plain language of the FCRA itself. By permitting unfettered access to consumer credit reports whenever unsubstantiated claims merely "involve" a consumer, the Court of Appeals has effectively repealed the FCRA's restriction of access to sensitive financial information on all consumers within its jurisdiction. Unlike the citizens of other states, consumers in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina no longer enjoy the same protections for privacy which Congress intended to provide throughout the nation.

Contrary to the Court of Appeals' opinion, no other circuit interpreting the FCRA has ever imposed a burden upon consumers to prove a bad faith misuse of their credit reports. Indeed, without a "permissible purpose" for this information, the FCRA prohibits users from retrieving such reports in the first place, regardless of their activities thereafter. See 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3).[1]

Under the FCRA, users may only establish a permissible purpose for obtaining credit reports if they:

(A) intend to use the information in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving the extension of credit to, or review or collection of an account of, the consumer; or

(B) intend to use the information for employment purposes; or

(C) intend to use the information in connection with the underwriting of insurance involving the consumer; or

(D) intend to use the information in connection with a determination of the consumer's eligibility for a license or other benefit granted by a governmental instrumentality required by

[1] If the Court of Appeals' new burden on consumers were left undisturbed, consumers would rarely benefit from the protections of the FCRA. Since evidence of an affirmative misuse or malevolent purpose would be exclusively within the province of the users themselves, it would be extremely difficult for any plaintiff to maintain an action under the FCRA if such evidence were required. Thus, such an impossible burden of production would take the teeth out of this statutory scheme.

law to consider an applicant's financial responsibility or status; or

(E) otherwise have a legitimate business need for the information in connection with a business transaction involving the consumer.

15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3). Thus, rather than imposing a substantive burden on consumers to prove an impermissible purpose, those requesting credit reports must limit their use to the permissible purposes outlined in the FCRA or face substantial liability. Mone v. Dranow, 945 F.2d 306, 307-08 (9th Cir. 1991); Hansen v. Morgan, 582 F.2d 1214, 1219 (9th Cir. 1978).

Although the Court of Appeals failed to analyze these provisions and ignored the opinions of all other circuits, none of the statutory provisions permitting persons to obtain consumer credit reports apply to the invasion at issue. While the Court of Appeals adopted a broad reading of these provisions by presuming a "legitimate business need" in all claims involving consumers, such expansive constructions have already been considered and rejected by several prominent courts throughout the country. See, e.g., Mone v. Dranow, 945 F.2d 306, 308 (9th Cir. 1991); Houghton v. New Jersey Mfrs. Ins. Co., 795 F.2d 1144, 1149 (3d Cir. 1986); Hovater v. Equifax, Inc., 823 F.2d 413, 419 (11th Cir. 1987); Russell v. Shelter Financial Services, 604 F. Supp. 201, 202-03 (W.D. Mo. 1984); Boothe v. TRW Credit Data, 557 F. Supp. 66, 70 (S.D.N.Y. 1982); Cochran v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 472 F. Supp. 827, 830-31 (N.D. Ga. 1979).

As the Ninth Circuit emphasized in reviewing the legislative history underlying the FCRA, "Congress intended the FCRA to authorize a credit reporting agency to issue a consumer report to determine 'an individual's eligibility for credit, insurance or employment.'" Mone, 945 F.2d at 308, quoting 116 Cong. Rec. 36,572 (1970)(Statement of Rep. Sullivan). To paraphrase the Ninth Circuit, Respondents' purported need to find an alternate address on which to serve legal papers upon Korotki "is plainly a purpose unrelated to 'an individual's eligibility for credit, insurance or employment.' A contrary construction of the statute would frustrate Congress' intent." Id.

As the Federal Trade Commission has opined, "[t]he possibility that a party may be involved in litigation involving a consumer does not provide a permissible purpose for that party to receive a consumer report on such consumer ... ." 16 CFR Pt. 600, App. at 385. In fact, earlier drafts of the FCRA confirm that this legislation was not designed to provide information to serve the litigious objective of asserting monetary claims against consumers. While authorizing the use of these reports by those wishing to convey such benefits on consumers as credit, insurance, employment or government licenses, House Resolution 16340 expressly prohibited the antagonistic purposes for which Respondents obtained Korotki's credit report. See H.R. 16340, reprinted in Hearings before the Subcomm. on Consumer Affairs of the Comm. on Banking and Currency of the U.S. House of Representatives, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. at 6 (1970).

According to § 34 of this bill, permissible purposes for credit reports do not include "furnishing information to an attorney for use in a legal matter unless the individual on whom the information is furnished is a client of that attorney and agrees in writing to the furnishing of the report." Id. § 34(c). While Congress selected the ultimate language of the FCRA from the Senate version, see S.B. 823, nothing in the legislative history shows any Congressional intent to broaden the purposes for credit reports to meet the needs of those making claims against consumers. As its main sponsor observed on the floor of Congress, "[t]he new title attempts to balance the need by those who extend credit, insurance or employment to know the facts necessary to make a sound decision," with the needs and rights of consumers. 116 Cong. Rec. 36,572 (1970) (emphasis added). In short, Congress intended to provide this information to those seeking to confer benefits upon consumers rather than those asserting claims against them.

Following this Congressional intent, courts have uniformly read the "legitimate business need" language of § 1681b(3)(E) as limiting the use of credit reports to those determining consumers' eligibility for such benefits as credit, employment, insurance or licensure. Mone, 945 F.2d at 308. As the Third Circuit observed in Houghton v. New Jersey Mfrs. Ins. Co., 795 F.2d 1144 (3d Cir. 1986), well-established canons of statutory construction dictate that this language be narrowly interpreted in light of the specific language which precedes it:

> A broad interpretation of the "business transaction" language of § 1681b(3)(E) would render the specificity of §§ 1681a(d) and b(3) meaningless. We believe that any § 1681b(3)(E) business transaction must relate to one of the other specifically enumerated transactions in §§ 1681a(d) and b(3), i.e., credit, insurance eligibility, employment, or licensing. This is to say that a consumer relationship must exist between the party requesting the report and the subject of the report.

Id. at 1149. Far from a unique interpretation, the Eleventh Circuit observed in a case cited with approval by ASC that "the courts have recognized the preeminence of § 1681a and conformed the breadth of § 1681b to its bounds." Hovater, 823 F.2d at 419 (11th Cir. 1987). Indeed, if a "catch-all reading of § 1681b(3)(E) is derived, the specifics of the preceding sections and subsections are rendered meaningless." Cochran, 472 F. Supp. at 830-31; Houghton, 795 F.2d at 1149. "This view of section 1681(b)(3)(E) is consistent with that of the majority of courts that have addressed the issue," including the Third, Seventh, Ninth and Eleventh Circuits. Mone, 945 F.2d at 308; Hovater, 823 F.2d at 419 ("Most district courts have reached similar conclusions.").

By splitting with these circuits and adopting a broad and unprecedented interpretation of "legitimate business need," the Court of Appeals rendered the entire Act meaningless for millions of consumers within its jurisdiction. Here, Respondents' activities did not, in any respect, relate to credit, insurance eligibility, employment, or licensing. Respondents have repeatedly sworn that they had no need whatsoever for the financial or credit information contained on the credit report, J.A. 133; 151, and confirmed that this report "was of no value." Yet, in total disregard for consumer privacy, ASC nonetheless disseminated Korotki's personal finances by faxing this entire report to Schmitt "just to show that [it] had been working on his case." J.A. 110-12.

In ignoring Respondents' own admissions, the Court of Appeals has concocted a virtually irrebuttable presumption of permissible purposes where none, in fact, exist. Even if one were to expand the FCRA to allow for the use of credit reports in efforts to serve consumers with legal papers, the time for serving Korotki had long expired by the date of the credit inquiry at issue, J.A. 150, and, in any event, there was no need to obtain his full credit report to locate this individual. Respondents failed to use four valid addresses for serving Korotki and summarily rejected a host of non-intrusive methods for obtaining more. J.A. 118, 121-22, 131-32, 151-52.

Notwithstanding the fact that Respondents' purported "business need" falls outside of the permissible purpose provision, the availability of many other non-intrusive reports and methods of obtaining addresses nullifies any claim that Respondents had any legitimate need for Korotki's full credit report. In failing to address these alternatives, the Court of Appeals ignored the fact that no legitimate need can exist where Respondents may obtain the desired information without a consumer credit report at all.

Beyond the Court of Appeals' disingenuous creation of an unspecified "business need," its expansive holding subjects consumers to credit inquiries whenever consumers are merely "involved" in the underlying transaction. Such abuses are even permitted where, as here, no claim has ever been asserted against the consumer, no personal liability applies, and no judgment has ever been obtained.

While the Court of Appeals emphasized Korotki's role in negotiations on behalf of his corporation, these communications never gave rise to any personal liability on the part of this consumer. See A. S. Abel Co. v. Skeen, 265 Md. 53, 288 A.2d 596 (1972) (agent for fully disclosed principal does not incur personal liability). Recognizing that his "client's contract was with APK Development Corp. and no one else," J.A. 578, Schmitt filed suit on behalf of Angelozzi against APK Development -- not against Korotki himself. J.A. 713-14.

Lacking any personal liability, Respondents lacked any need for information on the personal finances of this consumer. Nonetheless, the Court of Appeals cited inapplicable language in the FCRA to suggest that his credit report was somehow needed "in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving the extension of credit to, or review or collection of an account of, the consumer." 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3)(A) (emphasis added).[2]

Contrary to the Court of Appeals' cursory review of this language and the facts of this case, neither Respondents nor Angelozzi ever engaged in a credit transaction with Korotki and they were not, in any respect, attempting to collect upon an account of this consumer. See Mone, 945 F.2d at 308. Schmitt never instructed ASC to undertake collection of any debt owed by Korotki and ASC was not collecting money on indebtedness or working on the collection end of the business in connection with this consumer. J.A. 110; 115-115A. Having failed to cite any evidence remotely suggesting personal liability on the part of the consumer, the Court of Appeals cannot legitimately claim that they were engaged in the "collection of an account of ... the consumer." Grenier v. Equifax Credit Information Services, 892 F. Supp. 57, 59 (D. Conn. 1995).

Unfortunately for Korotki and other consumers residing in the Fourth Circuit, the Court of Appeals stubbornly insisted

[2] Without specifying its precise construction of this important language, the opinion below did not appear to recognize that the FCRA only authorizes a credit inquiry under this provision if needed in connection with (1) a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished; and (2) the extension of credit to, or review or collection of an account of, the consumer. 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3)(A). Although both of these elements are required, neither are present in this case.

that this information was somehow needed for unspecified collection purposes. While the District Court was content to speculate on theoretical needs for such information, the FCRA requires that these needs be legitimate and, as previously discussed, all other circuits and the sound majority of courts have rejected expansive interpretations of this language. 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3)(E); see, e.g., Hovater, 823 F.2d at 419; Mone, 945 F.2d at 308. Because the Court of Appeals departed from these circuits to remove the protections of the FCRA, this Court must now intervene to restore the privacy of millions of consumers.

II.

THE PETITION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE COURT OF APPEALS ELIMINATED FUNDAMENTAL PROTECTIONS FOR CONSUMER PRIVACY WHICH CONGRESS INTENDED TO PROVIDE IN PASSING THE FCRA

As this Court observed in Ohralik v. Ohio State Bar Assn., 436 U.S. 447, 460 (1978), in this type of commercial context, there is a strong governmental interest "in protecting consumers and regulating commercial transactions." See also Dunn & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc., 472 U.S. 749, 795 (1985)(Brennan, J., dissenting). By ruling in Defendants' favor, the Court of Appeals adopted a dangerous holding which would severely undermine Congressional protection for consumers and thwart the intent of Congress. In restricting access to consumer credit reports, Congress expressly found "a need to insure that consumer reporting agencies exercise their grave responsibilities with fairness, impartiality, and a respect for the consumer's right to privacy." 15 U.S.C. § 1681(a) (emphasis added). Indeed, "one of the major purposes of the FCRA is to protect the privacy of individual citizens and of records maintained by credit agencies." In re Grand Jury Subpoena to Credit Bureau of Greater Harrisburg, 594 F. Supp. 229, 233 (W.D. Pa. 1984); Rice v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 450 F. Supp. 668, 672 (M.D.N.C. 1978)("the consumer's right to privacy" is "one of the policies underlying the FCRA").

If this Court refrained from reviewing the Court of Appeals' holding that credit reports may be freely obtained by anyone asserting a monetary claim "involving" a consumer, J.A. 1342, it would destroy the consumer's right to privacy and frustrate Congressional goals. In particular, the opinion below invites abuses by those who will undoubtedly assert dubious or frivolous claims as a pretext for intruding upon personal financial data. In fact, this opinion would be cited as prime authority for those wishing to extort undeserved payments from consumers who fear exposure of financial and credit information which they regard as private.

As this Court is undoubtedly aware, anyone can assert monetary claims against consumers like Korotki regardless of merit.[3] Yet, as federal courts have long recognized, even monetary claims asserted in litigation do not entitle claimants to pry into a consumer's assets and financial status. See, e.g., [3] Simply put, there was never any claim against the consumer himself and the claim against his corporation was highly contested. Far from resulting in an actual judgment against Korotki, the underlying dispute between APK Development and Angelozzi was vigorously contested, with the latter's own expert verifying that this contractor failed to perform the necessary construction services. J.A. 166. Thus, Respondents could hardly base their intrusion into the financial affairs of the consumer on anything approaching an established debt for a sum certain.

Payne v. Howard, 75 F.R.D. 465 (D.D.C. 1977); Ranney-Brown Distributors, Inc. v. E.T. Barwick Industries, 75 F.R.D. 3 (S.D. Ohio 1977); Bogosian v. Gulf Oil Corp., 337 F. Supp. 1228 (E.D. Pa. 1971). Although litigants asserting monetary claims often seek to discover the assets of defendant consumers, "general discovery of a defendant's assets involves an invasion of privacy of such a magnitude that courts typically have not allowed it." Friedenthal, Kane & Miller, Civil Procedure 383 (West 2d ed. 1993)(footnote omitted).

Beyond formal discovery, courts have refused to permit such invasions through the use of consumer credit reports as well. In Mone, 945 F.2d 306, the defendant sought to recover funds from a consumer and obtained his credit report to determine the consumer's ability to satisfy any judgment later obtained. Although the defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that he had a "legitimate business need" for this information, the Ninth Circuit flatly rejected this argument. Id. at 308. According to the Mone court, the mere presence of litigation between parties does not give rise to a legitimate business need under the FCRA. Id. Thus, in denying the defendant's summary judgment motion, the Ninth Circuit emphasized that a "contrary construction of the statute would frustrate Congress' intent." Id.

Unfortunately, the Court of Appeals adopted a construction of the statute that would frustrate both Congress and consumers. Armed with the opinion below, those asserting monetary claims against consumers need not establish any legitimate need for credit information. Nor do they need to face the roadblocks of discovery so long imposed by federal and state courts throughout the country. Instead, they only need a $10.00 bill -- the price of a full credit report from ASC. J.A. 142.

While such credit inquiries may be justified where monetary claims have attained the legitimacy of enforceable judgments against consumers themselves, see, e.g., Baker v. Bronx-Westchester Investigations, Inc., 850 F. Supp. 260 (S.D.N.Y. 1994), such intrusions into personal credit and financial information should not be based upon the unilateral allegations of one party.[4] This is particularly true where, as here, these allegations amount to nothing more than fraudulent and frivolous claims by a contractor who has already been paid for work never performed! J.A. 1184. Such claims, thoroughly lacking in credibility and vigorously contested in litigation, should not serve as a pretext for invading an individual's privacy. To rule otherwise, this Court would elevate the unproven and baseless allegations of individual claimants over the privacy of innocent consumers.

When one expands these abuses to the multitude of business transactions in which consumers were merely "involved" in the communications chain, but bear no personal liability, consumer privacy is virtually eliminated. Considering the undisputed fact that the claimant in this case has never asserted and cannot legitimately assert any claim for monetary relief against the consumer, Respondents' needless intrusion into Korotki's personal credit status amounts to a dangerous distortion of the FCRA which this Court should address and rectify.

[4] Amazingly, the Court of Appeals totally misread the Baker decision by citing it for the dangerous proposition that Angelozzi need not "wait until his disputed claim had been reduced to judgment before obtaining a consumer report." A-6. Contrary to this misreading, the Baker court only approved of a consumer credit inquiry where an actual judgment had already been entered against the consumer himself. Baker, 850 F. Supp. 260. By contrast, in the case at bar, Angelozzi did not even have a claim against the consumer, much less the validity and reliability of an enforceable judgment.

CONCLUSION

Although this Court has yet to interpret the scope of the Fair Credit Reporting Act, the Court of Appeals' decision amounts to an urgent call for this Court's attention to an issue of monumental importance to millions of consumers. Departing from the law in other circuits, the Court of Appeals has subjected consumers within its jurisdiction to the danger of abusive and unjustified credit inquiries at the hands of their adversaries.

In an age when consumer privacy is subject to increasing intrusions, this Court should not remain silent as fundamental protections for consumer privacy are dismantled. Because consumers should not lose these protections by the mere misfortune of living in the Fourth Circuit, Petitioner and the amici curiae below, the U.S. Public Interest Research Group and the Bankcard Holders of America, urge that this Court issue a writ of certiorari to clarify the scope of these vital safeguards. Due to the Court of Appeals' significant departure from the Federal Trade Commission's interpretation of the FCRA, Petitioner also urges this Court to order the Solicitor General to present the views of that agency on these critical questions.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, at Baltimore. Frank A. Kaufman, Senior District Judge. (CA-94-1212-K).

December 5, 1997, Decided

Before WILKINS, Circuit Judge, PHILLIPS, Senior Circuit Judge, and THORNBURG, United States District Court Judge for the Western District of North Carolina, sitting by designation.

ARGUED: Irwin Raphael Kramer, THE LAW OFFICES OF IRWIN R. KRAMER, Owings Mills, Maryland, for Appellant. Terri Lynn Goldberg, ECCLESTON & WOLF, Baltimore, Maryland; Benjamin Lipsitz, Baltimore, Maryland, for Appellees. ON BRIEF: S. Todd Willson, ECCLESTON & WOLF, Baltimore, Maryland; Joel C. Richmond, OFFICE OF JOEL C. RICHMOND, Baltimore, Maryland, for Appellees. Ronald B. Katz, Owings Mills, Maryland, for Amicus Curiae.

PER CURIAM:

The appellant, Abraham Korotki, appeals from the district court's grant of summary judgment dismissing his action. For the reasons hereafter set forth, we affirm.

Summary judgment is appropriate if there is no genuine issue of material fact and judgment for the moving party is warranted as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). We review the record de novo and in doing so view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment. Sony Corp. of America v. Bank One, West Virginia, Huntington, N.A., 85 F.3d 131, 135 (4th Cir. 1996). From this review, we must determine whether a genuine issue exists from which a reasonable jury considering the evidence could return a verdict for plaintiff. Shaw v. Stroud, 13 F.3d 791, 798 (4th Cir.) (citing Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986)), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 813, 814 (1994). A mere scintilla of evidence is not sufficient to defeat summary judgment.

Korotki is in the business of real estate development and construction. In October 1991, he entered into a public works agreement with Baltimore County for construction of public improvements at Old Court Village. Korotki requested Angelozzi Brothers, Inc. (Angelozzi) to provide full trench compaction at a cost estimate of $12,000 and agreed to pay this amount for compaction or, in the alternative, to give Angelozzi a car in lieu of cash. Pursuant to this oral contract, Angelozzi completed the trench compaction and billed Korotki for $6,000, one-half the original cost estimate. After repeated demands for payment which were refused by Korotki, Angelozzi sought a mechanics lien against the development property and retained the services of attorneys Thomas, Ronald & Cooper, P.A., and Daniel B. Schmitt, now third-party defendants, to collect the indebtedness. The attorneys then hired defendant Attorney Services Corporation to serve notice of the lien on appellant and his development company. This service was sought on appellant as owner of the real estate on which Old Court Village was located and as the president and only principal of APK Development. Maryland law required service of the notice of intent to lien on the landowner. Md. Real Prop. Code Annot. § 9-104.

From September through December 1993, unsuccessful efforts were made to serve Korotki in a variety of ways from registered mail to personal service to posting of notice on the gate of Korotki's house. All of the efforts having failed, Attorney Services Corporation obtained a copy of Korotki's credit report from Equifax Credit Information Services, a licensed collection agency in the State of Maryland, for the purpose of obtaining a new service address for Korotki. No helpful information was obtained from the report; no further use was made of the report, and a breach of contract action was finally filed in state court for collection of the indebtedness.

Thereafter, Korotki learned that the credit document had been obtained without his permission and filed the action now before this Court. Appellant alleged a violation of the Fair Credit Reporting Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1681, et seq. (FCRA), and pendant state claims under the Maryland Consumer Credit Reporting Agencies Act (MCCRAA).

This Court addresses the defendants' summary judgment motion under the assumption that the report is a consumer report and, therefore, that the FCRA applies to its use.

> The term "consumer report" means any written, oral, or other communication of any information by a consumer reporting agency bearing on a consumer's credit worthiness . . . which is used or expected to be used or collected in whole or in part for the purpose of serving as a factor in establishing the consumer's eligibility for (1) credit or insurance to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, or (2) employment purposes, or (3) other purposes authorized under section 1681b of this title. . .

15 U.S.C. § 1681a(d) (1988); see also Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co., 915 F.2d 1264, 1273-75 (9th Cir. 1990).

Title 15, United States Code, Section 1681(b) permits a consumer reporting agency to furnish a report without the consumer's authorization:

> (3) to a person which it has reason to believe
> > (A) intends to use the information with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving . . . collection of an account of, the consumer; or
> > . . .
> > (E) otherwise has a > legitimate business need for the information in connection with a business transaction involving the consumer.

While this language might arguably apply only to consumer agencies, we conclude that the wording is equally applicable to a user. Under § 1681(b), a user may only obtain a consumer report for a permissible purpose therein enumerated. Yohay v. City of Alexandria Employees Credit Union, Inc., 827 F.2d 967, 972 (4th Cir. 1987) (citing Hansen v. Morgan, 582 F.2d 1214, 1216 (9th Cir. 1978)). Appellant has made no showing that the report was obtained for an impermissible purpose. We experience no difficulty under the facts of this case in concluding that seeking to obtain an alternate address at which to serve appellant was "a legitimate business need for the information in connection with a business transaction involving the [appellant]," § 1681(b)(3)(E); and, therefore, a permissible purpose for its use. And, Angelozzi was seeking to collect an account owed by the consumer, § 1681(b)(3)(A), likewise a permissible purpose. Korotki admitted requesting Angelozzi to perform certain compaction services whether or not these services were already included in Angelozzi's contract with the county. He also agreed that if the county was not required to pay for the services, he would tender his car as payment. Obviously, these admitted facts created a business relationship between the parties, and Angelozzi correctly believed this to be true. The terms "legitimate business need" and "in connection with" refer to the needs and objections of the individual to whom the report is furnished, not the needs of the person about whom the report is furnished. Zeller v. Samia, 758 F. Supp. 775, 781 (D. Mass 1991). In that context, it was not necessary for Angelozzi to wait until his disputed claim had been reduced to judgment before obtaining a consumer report. See Baker v. Bronx-Westchester Investigations, Inc., 850 F. Supp. 260, 262-63 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). It is likewise immaterial that a person other than defendant himself received the report for a permissible use. Id., at 262.

Appellant also seeks similar relief under the MCCRAA. Inasmuch as the FCRA and the MCCRAA are virtually identical, we conclude, as did the district court, that the defendants violated neither statute. Cambridge Title Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 817 F. Supp. 1263, 1278 (D. Md. 1992), aff'd, 989 F.2d 491 (4th Cir. 1993).

For the foregoing reasons and the reasons set forth by the court below, the district court's judgment is

ABRAHAM PAUL KOROTKI v. ATTORNEY SERVICES CORPORATION INC., et al.

CIVIL NO. K-94-1212

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MARYLAND

931 F. Supp. 1269

June 12, 1996, Filed

Irwin R. Kramer, Owings Mills, Maryland for plaintiff.

S. Todd Wilson, Terri L. Goldberg, and Eccleston and Wolf, Baltimore, Maryland for defendants Thomas, Ronald & Cooper and Daniel V. Schmitt.

Sheila Brooks-Tahir, Baltimore, Maryland for defendant Attorney Services Corporation.

FRANK A. KAUFMAN, Senior District Judge

Plaintiff alleges that defendants violated the federal Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA)[1] and the Maryland Consumer Credit Reporting Agencies Act (CCRAA)[2] when they acquired plaintiff's credit report in order to obtain an additional address at which to serve plaintiff with certain legal papers. Plaintiff also contends that defendants committed the tort of invasion of privacy. This Court has federal question jurisdiction over plaintiff's FCRA claim. 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Because plaintiff's remaining claims arise from the same case or controversy as his FCRA claim, this Court has supplemental jurisdiction over those state law claims. 28 U.S.C. § 1367. Pending before this Court are defendants' summary judgment motions and plaintiff's cross motion for summary judgment.

I. Facts and Procedural History

The relevant and material facts are undisputed. Plaintiff Korotki is the President of APK Development Corporation ("APK"), the developer for a property in Baltimore County, Maryland, known as Old Court Village ("OCV").[3] Korotki, either on his own behalf or on behalf of APK, contracted with Baltimore County to have sewer and water mains and roads installed at OCV in 1991.[4] Baltimore County requested and ASC's January 19, 1996 supplemental memorandum at 1. Plaintiff's filing was received in this Court on January 5, 1996, the day it was due, and plaintiff's counsel certified that it was hand-delivered to defendants' counsel on that date. While it was apparently not filed with the Clerk's Office of this Court on that date, ASC has shown no possible prejudice resulting therefrom. For that reason, this Court will consider plaintiff's January 5, 1996 filing.

[4] TRC's and Schmitt's January 5, 1996 motion for summary judgment, Ex. 4 at P8.

received bids for the performance of that utility work and awarded the contract to Angelozzi Brothers, Inc. ("Angelozzi"). While Angelozzi was performing the contract, questions arose among Angelozzi, Baltimore County officials and Korotki as to whether the contract required Angelozzi to perform certain compaction services. Korotki told Angelozzi that if the contract did not require Angelozzi to perform those services, Korotki would pay Angelozzi $12,000 to perform them and offered to pay in the form of a 1976 Cadillac Eldorado.[5] Angelozzi apparently later reduced the price to $6,000

Angelozzi submitted an invoice in the amount of $6,000 to Korotki on May 20, 1993.[6] Korotki apparently refused to pay that invoice, claiming that the original contract between Angelozzi and Baltimore County required Angelozzi to perform the compaction services, and that, in any event, Angelozzi had failed appropriately to perform the work.[7] Angelozzi then hired Defendant Thomas, Ronald & Cooper (TRC), a law firm which Angelozzi had used previously, to collect the disputed $6,000 from Korotki.[8] Defendant Schmitt, a lawyer with the aforementioned firm, attempted to establish a mechanic's lien against the OCV property and enlisted the aid of Attorney Services Corporation (ASC) to post that property with notice of the lien.

Inadvertently, ASC posted the notice at Korotki's personal residence, instead of on the OCV property. Before Schmitt became aware of ASC's mistake, the 90-day notice period for establishing the mechanic's lien had expired.[9] When Schmitt learned of the mistake on October 8, 1993, Schmitt instructed ASC to serve Korotki personally with papers regarding the mechanic's lien.[10] Despite repeated attempts, ASC was unable to serve Korotki at the addresses which ASC had for him.[11] At that point, ASC contends, Schmitt directed ASC to obtain an alternate address for Korotki from recent credit and DMV reports.[12] ASC, without any specific authorization from Korotki or Schmitt, obtained a credit report from Equifax on October 25, 1995.[13] ASC transmitted a copy of that report to Schmitt. ASC says it so did in order to show that ASC had been working on the case. ASC then destroyed its copy.[14] ASC admits it had no use for the credit information in that report, but was only interested in obtaining an address at which to serve Korotki.[15] Likewise, Schmitt made no use of the report.[16] Moreover, Korotki does not allege that ASC, Schmitt or TRC used the credit report for any purpose.

After learning that ASC had obtained his credit report, Korotki filed the present action against ASC on May 9, 1994, alleging wilful and negligent violation of the FCRA, wilful and negligent violation of the Maryland Consumer Credit Reporting Agencies Act (CCRAA), and invasion of privacy. ASC, in turn, sued Schmitt and TRC for indemnification and/or contribution and for negligent misrepresentation. Korotki then amended his complaint to add Schmitt and TRC as defendants, alleging the same claims against both Schmitt and TRC as he had previously alleged against ASC. Finally, Schmitt and TRC cross claimed against ASC for contribution and indemnification.

On November 6, 1995, defendant ASC filed a summary judgment motion against plaintiff. Plaintiff simultaneously opposed that motion and filed a cross-motion for partial summary judgment on liability only. This Court held an on-the-record motions hearing in open court on December 29, 1995 to consider those motions. At that time, the Court afforded Defendants TRC and Schmitt the opportunity to file a summary judgment motion against plaintiff, and those defendants thereafter filed that motion on January 5, 1996. At the aforementioned December 29, 1995 hearing, this Court also invited all parties to submit further filings to this Court regarding various issues.[17]

On January 19, 1996, plaintiff filed a motion regarding TRC's and Schmitt's failure to respond to his second request for production of documents. Plaintiff's second request for documents contained four separate requests. Regarding the first two requests, counsel for TRC and Schmitt represented that she had previously provided to counsel for plaintiff all documents responsive to those requests. The second two requests sought certain financial information from TRC and [17] In a letter to this Court dated January 5, 1996, plaintiff stated that "this Court's preliminary views on this case may result from what it observed as shortcomings in presentation rather than the merits of the case itself." To the contrary, this Court is of the opinion that all parties in this case have thoroughly and adequately presented their respective positions.

Schmitt. According to counsel for plaintiff, such requests were relevant only to plaintiff's claim for punitive damages. This Court delayed ruling on the second two requests until after deciding the aforementioned pending summary judgment motions. Because this Court will decide those motions in favor of defendants, and determine that there is no liability upon any defendant herein, no damage issue need be reached and plaintiffs' motion regarding discovery as to punitive damages is moot.

In several written and oral communications with counsel, this Court afforded the parties opportunities to make additional filings. The final deadline for these filings was March 24, 1996. Having considered all motions filings, this Court will grant summary judgment in favor of defendants and deny plaintiff's summary judgment motion. The summary judgment motion of defendants TRC and Schmitt will be treated as moot.

II. Summary Judgment Standard

Summary judgment shall be granted "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. Material facts are those facts which the substantive law identifies as "facts that might affect the outcome of the suit." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). A dispute concerning material facts is genuine if "a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Id. "A defendant moving for summary judgment has the burden of showing the absence of any genuine issue of material fact and that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. . . . Once a defendant makes the necessary showing, the plaintiff must go forward and produce evidentiary facts to support his contention." Barwick v. Celotex Corp., 736 F.2d 946, 958 (4th Cir. 1984). In fact, "when a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but . . . must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). However, the non-movant is entitled to have all reasonable inferences drawn in his favor. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 158-59, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 (1970).

III. Analysis

In deciding the pending motions, this Court must address four issues. First, is the report ASC obtained from Equifax on October 25, 1993 a "consumer report" to which the FCRA applies?[18] Second, if so, what does the FCRA require of [18] Counsel for plaintiff noted, in a letter to this Court dated February 29, 1996, that the parties stipulated to the fact that the report at issue in this case was a "consumer report." One or more defendants dispute that contention. See March 4, 1996 letter from counsel for defendants TRC and Schmitt. In any event, a court is generally not bound by parties' stipulations regarding issues of law. Koch v. U.S. Dept. of Interior, 47 F.3d 1015, 1018 (10th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 208, 116 S. Ct. 303 (1995); In re Lawson Square Inc., 816 F.2d 1236, 1240-41 (8th Cir. 1987), Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1477 n.1 (9th Cir. 1986), modified on other grounds, 810 F.2d 1517 (1987); Saviano v. C.I.R., 765 F.2d 643, 645 (7th Cir. 1985). Whether the report at issue is a consumer defendants herein? Third, have the defendants failed to comply with those requirements? Fourth, are defendants liable to plaintiff on any of plaintiff's state law claims?

A. Consumer Report

15 U.S.C. § 1681a(d) defines a consumer report as any written, oral, or other communication of any information by a consumer reporting agency bearing on a consumer's credit worthiness, credit standing, credit capacity, character, general reputation, personal characteristics, or mode of living which is used or expected to be used or collected in whole or in part for the purpose of serving as a factor in establishing the consumer's eligibility for (1) credit or insurance to be used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, or (2) employment purposes, or (3) other purposes authorized under section 1681b of this title.

That definition occasions the need to inquire into the motive of the credit reporting agency, here Equifax, because "if at the time the information was collected, the agency expected it to be used for proper purposes, a transmittal of that information would be a consumer report." Heath v. Credit Bureau of Sheridan, Inc., 618 F.2d 693, 696 (10th Cir. 1980). The record in this litigation indicates that when Equifax provided ASC with the computer software to obtain credit reports such as the October 25, 1993 report regarding Korotki, Equifax report is a mixed question of fact and law. Chandris, Inc. v Latsis, 132 L. Ed. 2d 314, 115 S. Ct. 2172, 2190 (1995). Therefore, even if the parties stipulated that the report was a consumer report, this Court would not be bound by that stipulation to the extent that it involves an issue of law.

apparently provided ASC a copy of the FCRA.[19] That fact at least raises an inference that when Equifax collected the information, it anticipated that the information would be used, by ASC and/or others, for a proper purpose under the FCRA.[20] Moreover, a review of the three-page report itself suggests that at least some of the information in it was collected for the purpose of determining Korotki's eligibility for credit. The first page appears to refer solely to APK Development. The second two pages, however, appear to contain information regarding Korotki's individual bank accounts, mortgages and credit cards. On this record, this Court cannot say as a matter of law that none of the information in Korotki's report was collected for the purpose of establishing Korotki's eligibility for consumer credit. For that reason, for purposes of deciding defendants' summary judgment motion, it will be assumed that the report is a consumer report and that the FCRA therefore applies to its use.[21]

[19] ASC's February 29, 1996 supplemental memorandum, Exhibit 2, Aff. of Korotki at 140-141.

[20] As an attachment as Exhibit D to plaintiff's March 22, 1996 filing, plaintiff submitted an affidavit in support of plaintiff's position that the report at issue in this case is a consumer report. On March 29, 1996, defendants TRC and Schmitt moved to strike that affidavit. Plaintiff opposed that motion. Because this Court has resolved that issue without resort to the affidavit, the motion to strike that affidavit is moot.

[21] It may be possible to take the contrary position that the report is not governed by the FCRA because it was utilized for commercial purposes. Representative Sullivan, a sponsor of the FCRA, stated that the FCRA "does not apply to reports

B. Requirements of the FCRA

The legislative history of the FCRA indicates that Congress intended that statute "to protect consumers from inaccurate or arbitrary information in a consumer report, which is used as a factor in determining an individual's eligibility for credit, insurance or employment." 116 Cong. Rec. 36572 (1970). Representative Sullivan, one of the FCRA's sponsors, stated that the FCRA "permit[s] the free flow of information about a consumer, while providing the consumer at the same time the utilized for business, commercial, or professional purposes." 116 Cong. Rec. 36,572 (1972). Likewise, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has concluded that "the FCRA does not cover reports furnished for transactions that consumers enter into primarily in connection with businesses they operate (e.g. a consumer's rental of equipment for use in his retail store)." 16 C.F.R Part 600, at 387 (1995). That position however appears to conflict with the way some courts have defined a consumer report. Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co., 915 F.2d 1264, 1273-75 (9th Cir. 1990) ("If a consumer reporting agency provides a report based on a reasonable expectation that the report will be put to a use permissible under the FCRA, then that report is a 'consumer report' under the FCRA" regardless of whether report is actually used for a business purpose) (emphasis in original); Ippolito v. WNS, Inc., 864 F.2d 440, 453 (7th Cir. 1988) ("even if a report is used or expected to be used for a non-consumer purpose, it may still fall within the definition of a consumer report if it contains information that was originally collected by a consumer reporting agency with the expectation that it would be used for a consumer purpose"); Heath, 618 F.2d at 696. Because this Court concludes that defendants used the report for a permissible purpose, and therefore did not violate the FCRA, this Court does not need further to explore that issue.

ability to rectify any errors causing his unwarranted difficulties." Id. Plaintiff apparently takes the position that the main purpose of the FCRA is to protect consumers' privacy. However, as Representative Sullivan noted, the House "amendments seeking to protect individual privacy were rejected" by Senate members of the Conference Committee. Id. While privacy is one of the concerns Congress was apparently considering when it enacted the FCRA, that concern was balanced by Congress against the needs of the business community for information regarding consumers. Such balancing of various concerns is evident from the statute itself which states that the purpose of the FCRA is to require that consumer reporting agencies adopt reasonable procedures for meeting the needs of commerce for consumer credit, personnel, insurance, and other information in a manner which is fair and equitable to the consumer, with regard to the confidentiality, accuracy, relevancy, and proper utilization of such information.

15 U.S.C. § 1681(b)

15 U.S.C. § 1681b allows a consumer reporting agency to furnish a consumer report, without the consumer's authorization, to a third party who has one of five purposes listed in § 1681b(3). That section provides in pertinent part that

[a] consumer reporting agency may furnish a consumer report . . . (3) to a person which it has reason to believe (A) intends to use the information in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving the extension of credit to, or review or collection of an account of, the consumer; or . . . (E) otherwise has a legitimate business need for the information in connection with a business transaction involving the consumer.

(emphasis added).

§ 1681b appears to impose requirements only on consumer reporting agencies. The parties in this case dispute whether ASC is a consumer reporting agency or a user of credit information.[22] That dispute does not require resolution, however, because the Fourth Circuit has concluded that users of consumer reports also must comply with § 1681b. Yohay v. City of Alexandria Employees Credit Union, 827 F.2d 967, 972 (4th Cir. 1987) (Kaufman, J., sitting by designation).

In Hansen v. Morgan, 582 F.2d 1214, 1216 (9th Cir. 1978), the Ninth Circuit incorporated the criminal provisions of section 1681q into sections 1681n [Civil liability for willful noncompliance] and 1681o [Civil liability for negligent noncompliance] and held that a user who obtains a consumer report under false pretenses, as those words are used in section 1681q, can be civilly liable under either section 1681n or 1681o. In Hansen, Judge Carter wrote that "the standard for determining when a consumer report has been obtained under false pretenses will usually be defined in relation to the permissible purposes of consumer reports which are enumerated in 15 U.S.C. § 1681b," id. at 1219 (footnote omitted), "that obtaining a consumer report . . . without disclosing the impermissible purpose for which the report is desired can constitute obtaining consumer information under false pretenses."

[22] However, the parties agree that defendants TRC and Schmitt are users, not consumer reporting agencies.

827 F.2d at 971-72. Thus, whether defendants are users or consumer reporting agencies, they could only obtain Korotki's report if they had a permissible purpose. To prove a violation of the FCRA, plaintiff must show that defendants had an impermissible purpose in obtaining the credit report or, in other words, that they lacked a permissible purpose. The only purpose which the record reflects that defendants had was to obtain an alternate address at which to serve Korotki. In this Court's view, that purpose is permissible under 15 U.S.C. § 1681b(3)(E); accordingly, defendants did not violate the FCRA.

One question which arises is the standard that a court should use to determine whether a user has shown that he or she has a permissible purpose under § 1681b. That provision requires that the consumer reporting agency have "reason to believe" that the information it provides to a user will be used for one of the enumerated permissible purposes. The case law suggests that the burden on users is similar. For example, in Zeller v. Samia, 758 F. Supp. 775, 781-82 (D. Mass. 1991), defendant had previously alleged that plaintiff owed him a debt and had obtained plaintiff's consumer report in connection with collection of that debt. The court concluded that that purpose in obtaining a consumer report was permissible, even though defendant merely had reason to believe plaintiff owed him a debt, and did not have conclusive proof of that fact. Likewise, in Cambridge Title Co. v. Transamerica Title Insurance Co., 817 F. Supp. 1263, 1278 (D. Md. 1992), aff'd, 989 F.2d 491 (4th Cir. 1993), defendant, who was plaintiff's principal, believed that $1.3 million had been misappropriated and obtained plaintiff's consumer report to determine whether plaintiff had misappropriated that money. Judge Harvey concluded that such purpose was permissible even though defendant apparently did not know, but only believed, that it could have been true that the money was missing. Thus, so long as a user has reason to believe that a permissible purpose exists, that user may obtain a consumer report without violating the FCRA.

C. Defendants' liability regarding the FCRA

§ 1681b(3)(E) authorizes a person to obtain a consumer's credit report when that person "has a legitimate business need for the information in connection with a business transaction involving the consumer." Courts have interpreted § 1681b(3)(E) in different ways. For example, the Third Circuit concluded that a transaction lies within the business need exception when it relates to "one of the other specifically enumerated transactions in §§ 1681a(d) and b(3), i.e., credit, insurance eligibility, employment, or licensing." Houghton v. New Jersey Mfrs. Ins. Co., 795 F.2d 1144, 1149 (3d Cir. 1986). See also Mone v. Dranow, 945 F.2d 306, 308 (9th Cir. 1991). Courts adopting such a restrictive approach reason that "a broad interpretation of the "business transaction" language of § 1681b(3)(E) would render the specificity of §§ 1681a(d) and b(3) meaningless." Houghton, 795 F.2d at 1149. Other courts have adopted a less restrictive interpretation of that section. Hovater v. Equifax, Inc., 823 F.2d 413, 419 (11th Cir. 1987); Cambridge, 817 F. Supp. at 1278; Houghton, 795 F.2d at 1150 (Sloviter, J., concurring). See also Elwin Griffith, The Quest for Fair Credit Reporting and Equal Credit Opportunity in Consumer Transactions, 25 U. Mem. L. Rev. 37, 51-62 (1994) (discussion of various interpretations of § 1681b(3)(E).

Even under the narrowest interpretation of § 1681b(3)(E), defendants in this case had a permissible purpose to obtain Korotki's consumer report because the business transaction involved here related to § 1681b(3)(A), one of the other purposes specifically enumerated by § 1681b(3), which authorizes a person attempting to collect an account of a consumer to obtain the consumer's credit report. Angelozzi, and those working for him, apparently believed that the debt was owed by Korotki, the consumer,[23] or by APK Development.[24] Thus, § 1681b(3)(A) would appear to provide sufficient authority for defendants' actions. However, even if that not be so, the business transaction giving rise to [23] The FCRA defines a consumer merely as "an individual." § 1681a(c). The statute does not limit the definition of a consumer to consumer purposes. Elwin Griffith, The Quest for Fair Credit Reporting and Equal Credit Opportunity in Consumer Transactions, 25 U. Mem. L. Rev. 37, 58 (1994). This definition is in contrast to Congress' explicit definition of a consumer in the Truth in Lending Act as a natural person involved in a credit transaction for personal, family or household purposes. 15 U.S.C. § 1602(h). Under the FCRA's definition of a "consumer," this Court concludes that Korotki is a consumer, and entitled to assert what a "consumer" may assert under the FCRA.

[24] Schmitt testified that Angelozzi's contract was with APK Development and not with Korotki. TRC's and Schmitt's January 5, 1996 motion for summary judgment, Ex. 3, Dep. of Schmitt at 40. However, the record contains certain indications that Korotki, personally, may have been a party to the alleged contract. Id., at PP H, I. That may involve an issue of law, or of mixed law and fact, which has not been fully briefed by the parties. However, because this Court concludes that defendants, in any event, have a permissible purpose under § 1681b(3)(E), it is not necessary to resolve that issue.

the alleged debt involved Korotki, thus bringing the matter under and within § 1681b(3)(E).

In this case, Korotki testified that he asked Angelozzi to perform certain compaction services whether or not those services were already included in Angelozzi's contract with the County. Korotki further testified that he agreed, if the County was not obligated so to pay, to pay $12,000 in the form of a certain car in return for Angelozzi's performing those services. Korotki does not withdraw those statements but now claims that he has never had any "personal business relationship" with Angelozzi.[25] The parties apparently dispute whether, on those facts, a business relationship involving Angelozzi and Korotki existed. That dispute does not prevent the entry of summary judgment, however, because it is not a relevant dispute. This Court is not required in this case to determine whether such a business relationship in fact existed. Instead, this Court need only determine whether Angelozzi had reason to believe that such a relationship existed. See Zeller v. Samia, 758 F. Supp. 775, 781 (D. Mass. 1991). In that context, this Court concludes that the agreement between the two parties, to which plaintiff admits, gave Angelozzi reason to believe that Korotki and/or APK Development owed Angelozzi a debt. For that reason, Angelozzi was entitled to attempt to collect the debt and to hire Schmitt and TRC to do so. See Baker v. Bronx-Westchester Investigations, Inc., 850 F. Supp. 260, 262-63 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (private detective acting on behalf of judgment creditor was entitled to obtain judgment debtor's consumer report); 16 C.F.R. Pt. 600 App. at 392 ("An attorney collecting a debt for a creditor client, including a party suing on a debt or collecting on behalf of a judgment creditor or lien creditor, has a permissible purpose to obtain a consumer report on the debtor to the same extent as the client."). Moreover, it appears that Schmitt and TRC, in turn, were entitled to hire ASC to aid in the collection effort.

Plaintiff argues that ASC did not have a permissible purpose because ASC admitted that Schmitt never asked ASC to collect the debt, but only asked ASC to post a mechanic's lien and, later, to serve Korotki personally. In Baker, 850 F. Supp. 260 (S.D.N.Y. 1994), the plaintiff made a similar argument. That court stated:

For purposes of 15 U.S.C. § 1681b, we find no material distinction between the hiring of an investigator to actually collect a judgment, and the hiring of an investigator to locate the debtor so that judgment may thereafter be collected. This is clear in light of the language of § 1681b that a report may be issued for the 'review or collection of an account.'

Id. at 262 n.5. Likewise, this Court finds no material distinction between the hiring of ASC to collect a debt and the hiring of ASC to establish a mechanic's lien or effect service so that the debt "may thereafter be collected." Id.

Plaintiff asserts that, if this Court grants summary judgment to defendants, such a ruling will allow any claimant asserting a monetary claim against another person to obtain that person's consumer report without violating the FCRA. Plaintiff's assertion is incorrect because asserting a monetary claim and collecting a debt present two different situations. For example, in Mone v. Dranow, 945 F.2d 306 (9th Cir. 1991), the plaintiff quit employment with the defendant and established a competing firm. The defendant, in an earlier action, sued the plaintiff, alleging unfair competition. Before filing that suit, the defendant obtained the plaintiff's credit report in order to determine whether plaintiff had sufficient assets to pay the judgment demanded in defendant's complaint. When plaintiff learned of defendant's acquisition of the credit report, plaintiff sued defendant, alleging violations of the FCRA. The Ninth Circuit concluded that defendant violated the FCRA, in part because defendant was not involved in a credit transaction with the plaintiff and did not have a permissible purpose under the FCRA to obtain plaintiff's consumer report. Id.. at 308. Mone is distinguished, however, from the instant case in which it is undisputed that Korotki offered to pay Angelozzi for certain construction services. Furthermore, Angelozzi had at least some reason to believe Korotki and/or APK Development owed him a debt. Those facts indicate a credit transaction and are sufficient to create a permissible purpose under the FCRA.

Plaintiff also argues that, assuming defendant ASC only needed another address at which to serve plaintiff, ASC could have obtained that address by running a less intrusive credit check. ASC responds that the less intrusive reports would not have provided an additional address. Even assuming ASC could have obtained the information it needed from a less comprehensive summary, the FCRA does not limit authorized users' access to credit information. A user who has a permissible purpose may obtain a consumer report.[26] Plaintiff offers no authority for his contrary position that the FCRA requires a user to obtain the least intrusive report containing the information sought. Because this Court concludes that defendants had a permissible purpose, they did not violate the FCRA by ordering what plaintiff refers to as a full credit report.[27] That defendants may not have needed the credit information included in that report, but only an additional address at which to service Korotki, does not change that result.

[26] The FCRA does limit use of an "investigative consumer report", defined in § 1681a(e) as a consumer report in which the information is obtained through personal interviews with the consumers' neighbors, friends or associates. See § 1681d "Disclosure of investigative consumer reports."

Finally, plaintiff argues that once the period for establishing the mechanic's lien had expired, serving Korotki personally with papers regarding that lien would have no effect. Assuming without deciding that that proposition is accurate, it was nevertheless reasonable for Schmitt to pursue personal service if he believed at the time that such service would preserve rights of his client which would otherwise be lost. The record reflects that Schmitt did so believe.[28] The defendants, having produced evidence of a permissible purpose, are entitled to summary judgment unless plaintiff, who bears the burden of going forward to show lack of a proper purpose, produces some evidence upon which a jury could find to the contrary. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 252, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505

However, in any event, plaintiff does not assert in any of his pleadings that the report at issue in this case is an investigative consumer-report

(1986). Plaintiff has not offered any bad faith reason for which Schmitt might have obtained the credit report. Plaintiff appeared merely to speculate during the December 29, 1995 hearing that Schmitt might be untruthful and that his credibility was an issue for the jury. Such a response is insufficient to survive summary judgment. Smith v. First National Bank of Atlanta, 837 F.2d 1575, 1580 (11th Cir. 1988) (summary judgment in favor of defendant appropriate in privacy claim arising from same facts as FCRA claim because plaintiff produced no evidence that defendant acted in bad faith) (decision of district court included as an appendix to 11th Circuit's opinion); Zeller v. Samia, 758 F. Supp. 775, 782 (D. Mass. 1991) (plaintiff who introduced no evidence indicating that defendant's use of consumer credit report was for any other reason than in connection with a business transaction with plaintiff did not survive summary judgment).[29] Furthermore, plaintiff cannot get to the jury

[29] Cf. Yohay, 827 F.2d 967, 969, 972 (court concluded that ex-wife who testified that she obtained her ex-husband's credit report to ensure that he was no longer using joint credit arrangements obtained that report under false pretenses); Hansen v. Morgan, 582 F.2d 1214, 1216-17, 1221 (plaintiff who alleged that defendants obtained plaintiffs' credit report in order to determine whether one plaintiff used improper financing procedures during an election campaign survived summary judgment).

It may be that summary judgment is seldom appropriate when state of mind is at issue. Magill v. Gulf and Western Industries, Inc., 736 F.2d 976, 979 (4th Cir. 1984) (record contained conflicting evidence regarding state of mind issue); Charbonnages de France v. Smith, 597 F.2d 406, 414 (4th Cir. 1979) (same). Defendants are nevertheless entitled to summary judgment in this case because plaintiff has neither simply because he hopes that "the jury will disbelieve the evidence that the summary judgment movant has adduced." Wilson v. Clancy, 747 F. Supp. 1154, 1158 (D. Md. 1990). See also DF Activities Corp. v. Brown, 851 F.2d 920, 922 (1988) ("A plaintiff cannot withstand summary judgment by arguing that although in pretrial discovery he has gathered no evidence of the defendant's liability, his luck may improve at trial."). While it is true that credibility determinations are for the jury, Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986), plaintiff must "produce some fact to shake the credibility" of defendants' witnesses. Schoonfield v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 399 F. Supp. 1068, 1078 (D. Md. 1975). Plaintiff has not done so here. For that reason, defendants are entitled to summary judgment.

Judge Harvey's decision in Cambridge Title Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., 817 F. Supp. 1263, 1278 (D. Md. 1992), aff'd, 989 F.2d 491 (4th Cir. 1993), provides further support for this Court's conclusion that defendants in this case did not violate the FCRA. In Cambridge, plaintiffs were a title company and its principal officer, Henry Louis. Cambridge Title Company did not underwrite the risks insured by the policies it issued but contracted with defendant Transamerica Title Insurance Company for such underwriting. Cambridge eventually became Transamerica's agent. Plaintiff Louis alleged that Transamerica violated the FCRA and the CCRAA by obtaining two credit reports on Louis. Transamerica had obtained one report "pursuant to regular credit checks undertaken by Transamerica concerning a person like Louis who was the principal of one of produced nor proffered any evidence that Schmitt, or any other defendant, acted in bad faith.

Transamerica's agents." Id.. at 1278. The other report Transamerica obtained to determine whether Louis had converted $1.3 million that was believed to be missing from Cambridge's escrow accounts for his personal use. Judge Harvey concluded that both of Transamerica's purposes were legitimate business purposes within the meaning of § 1681b(3)(E).

Plaintiff attempts to distinguish Cambridge by noting that Judge Harvey relied on the fact that the parties in Cambridge had an existing business relationship. Plaintiff then argues that he and Angelozzi did not have a business relationship in October, 1993 when ASC obtained plaintiff's consumer report. According to plaintiff, if such a relationship existed at all, it ended on July 7, 1993 when Angelozzi completed its work at Old Court Village. However, a business relationship does not end when the work contracted for is completed, but only when both performance and payment are satisfactorily accomplished and completed. In effect, plaintiff is arguing that one party to a business relationship can terminate that relationship by refusing to pay an alleged debt. Clearly that is not the case.

D. State law statutory and common law counts

Because the FCRA and the CCRAA are virtually identical, this Court concludes that defendants violated neither statute. See Cambridge, 817 F. Supp. 1263, 1278 (D. Md. 1992). Regarding plaintiff's claim for invasion of privacy, this Court notes § 1681t which states:

This subchapter does not annul, alter, affect, or exempt any person subject to the provisions of this subchapter from complying with the laws of any State with respect to the collection, distribution, or use of any information on consumers, except to the extent that those laws are inconsistent with any provisions of this subchapter, and then only to the extent of the inconsistency.

The FCRA authorizes defendants' actions in this case. If Maryland tort law imposed such liability for those actions, that law would be inconsistent with the FCRA and, therefore, § 1681t would preempt that law.

Moreover, Maryland, in defining the torts relating to invasion of privacy, looks to the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652B. Lawrence v. A.S. Abell Co., 299 Md. 697, 700-701, 475 A.2d 448 (1984); Hollander v. Lubow, 277 Md. 47, 53-55, 351 A.2d 421 (1976), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 936, 49 L. Ed. 2d 388, 96 S. Ct. 2651 (1976); New Summit Associates v. Nistle, 73 Md. App. 351, 360, 533 A.2d 1350 (1987). According to the Restatement, a person who intentionally intrudes upon the private affairs of another is liable to the other "if the intrusion would be highly offensive to a reasonable person." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 652B. Because Maryland law, specifically the CCRAA, authorizes intrusion upon plaintiff's affairs to the extent which occurred in this case, such intrusion, as a matter of law, is hardly highly offensive to a reasonable person.

Finally, because this Court concludes that none of the defendants are liable to plaintiff, defendant ASC's third party claims against Schmitt and TRC, and Schmitt and TRC's third party claims against ASC, are moot.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, this Court will enter summary judgment in favor of all defendants on all of plaintiff's claims against them in a separate Order of even date herewith and, in that Order, deny, or treat as moot, all other pending motions.
